5. Objective

The primary objective of procuring Video authentication software for the Odisha Police as Video authentication software systems are becoming increasingly important for police departments in India for several reasons:

- i. Evidence Integrity: Video authentication software ensures that digital evidence, such as footage from surveillance cameras, body-worn cameras, or mobile phones, remains unaltered and tamper-proof. This is crucial for maintaining the integrity of evidence presented in court.
- ii. Verification of Authenticity: The software can validate whether a video has been manipulated or altered, ensuring the reliability of evidence. It can detect any edits or inconsistencies in the footage, which is important for legal and investigative purposes.
- iii. Crime Investigation: Forensic analysis of video evidence helps investigators establish timelines, identify suspects, and reconstruct crime scenes. Authentication software provides a layer of trust in the digital material used in these investigations.
- iv. Accountability and Transparency: In incidents involving police personnel, such as the use of force or high-stakes operations, video authentication can promote accountability by providing unaltered records of events, improving public trust.
- v. Combating Misinformation: With the increasing spread of fake or altered videos, police departments can use authentication tools to quickly verify the authenticity of videos, helping to prevent the spread of misinformation and panic.

- vi. Legal Compliance: Courts often require authenticated video evidence to ensure the fair administration of justice. Video authentication software helps police meet these legal standards.
